  2. Listen to spoken academic English (at natural native speaker speed and displaying native pronunciation features) and answer listening comprehension tasks effectively;
  3. Read a set of academic texts on a variety of topics and answer reading comprehension tasks correctly and within the required time limits;
  4. Understand a set of given data in the form of graphs, diagrams and other types of numerical data, in order to write an effective and sufficiently accurate academic report within given time limits (IELTS Writing Task 1);
  5. Analyze the requirements of a discussion-type essay question in order to write an effective argumentative essay that responds to the task in an appropriate and relevant way, using language that is sufficiently accurate and within given time limits (IELTS Writing Task 2);

TEACHING METHODS

The IELTS module aims to prepare students for the IELTS exam, by giving them the skills required to pass the four IELTS papers at Band 6 or above. Students will be trained for IELTS by using real IELTS material and will be assessed using the publicly available IELTS band descriptors. Face-to-face teaching will focus on all the four skills in turn, starting from thematic units of content, centred around topics of general and academic interest. Particular attention will be given to improving student's oral communication skills, by making them engage in group-work and conducting mock-interviews with one another on given topics. Another major focus will be on improving writing skills. Students will practice two main academic genres: (a) factual, descriptive reports based on analysing and interpreting statistical data; (b) argumentative essays of several distinct sub-types. The module also aims to achieve a significant increase in the range and flexibility of students' vocabulary to enable them to cope effectively with the Speaking and Writing papers.

Assessment consists of an IELTS-type exam paper based upon publicly available past IELTS papers. This involves a Reading paper, a Listening paper and a Writing paper (with two writing tasks, one involving a report on statistical information in the form of a graph or diagram, the other one a discussion/argumentative essay) – all within a time limit of 2:45 minutes – and a speaking interview (11-14 minutes).

The employability skills that the module develops are mainly communication skills, having to do with fluent and accurate oral and written expression in English, logical and critical thinking skills, the ability to analyse mathematical/statistical data and write informative reports, being able to articulate a coherent position on a given topic, and having the necessary skills for communicating effectively in interviews. The module also develops good exam skills, increased confidence and effective presentation skills in interview situations and the ability to perform at a high level under time pressure, in particular the ability to produce a coherent written text or an extended verbal answer to an unseen exam question.
